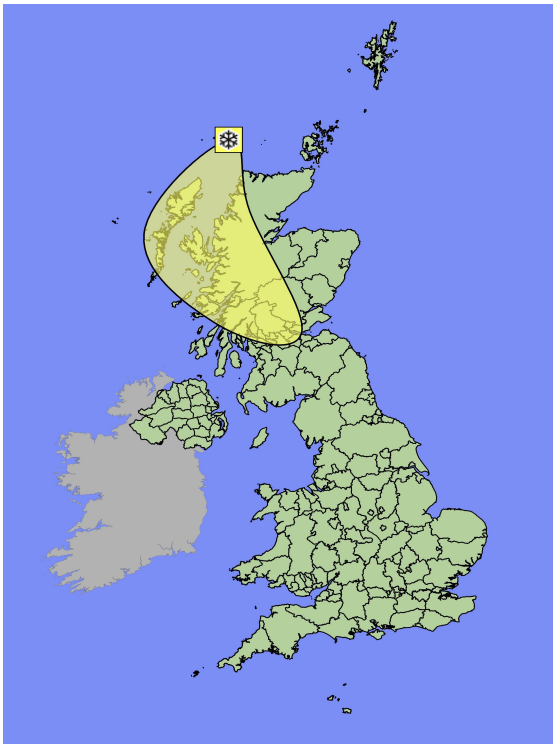
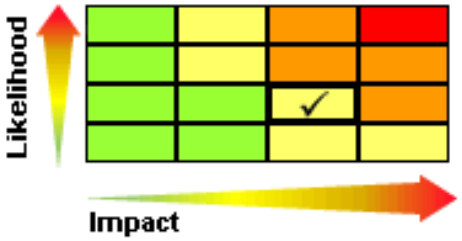
National Severe Weather Warning Service





CANCELLED

Chief Forecasters Assessment
Precipitation will fall as rain and sleet on coasts but readily turn to snow inland. There is currently a lot of variation amongst the computer models in their predictions for the extent of snow, and so confidence is not high in this warning.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Alert of Snow

Valid from 00:00 on Sat, 10th Dec 2011 until 12:00 on Sat, 10th Dec 2011

An area of sleet and snow is expected to move southeastwards across Scotland, and has the potential to leave a covering of 2-4 cm in places. There is currently more than average uncertainty in the timing and extent of snow, and this warning is likely to be updated.
